

Abstract

A prosthesis for replacement of a ball and socket joint in the human body. The prosthetic components comprise a shaft, having a body, a neck attached to said body and a ball attached to said neck, the shaft being insertable through a hole in the femur of the patient and receivable in the cup of an acetabulum, attached to a bone in the human body, for movement therein.